

The radio broadcasters do not own the exclusive right to local weather and traffic. Anyone with the ability to see or catch word of events such as this, should have the right to report the weather and traffic. The NAB is out only to protect the stations, not the consumer. If the NAB is that upset over the issue, they need to find a way to get the listener back to regular radio. The way our economy works, is through consumer driven products. I think we all learned what happens when we try to regulate and place restrictions on previously unrestricted products. Disaster. Thank you for your time, and don't place handcuffs on a great product that is able to do something radio has not been able to do in many years, obtain quality programming and make it open to the United States.
